

Blair Steinbach

Program Leader

Bio

As a young man, Blair set off to Bible College with a suitcase full of passion and certainty, dreaming of becoming a youth camp leader. A year later, he was asking big questions, and the staff suggested he might find his answers elsewhere. Blair eventually found an outlet for his enquiring mind in the creation and facilitation of award-winning experiential learning programs as cofounder of Eagle's Flight. During his tenure there, he travelled to six continents, taking his compelling content and playful spirit wherever he went.

An interest in neuroscience took him to his next port of call, the Institute for Health and Human Potential (IHHP), where he spent the next chapter of his life leading the design and facilitation of a suite of world-class emotional intelligence training programs.

In 2012, Blair packed his bags again, for a move to Dublin, where he co-founded GreenLine Conversations, presenting powerful communication training to organizations that had been devastated by Ireland's recent financial crash. Since then, the simple messaging and elegant design of GreenLine has been embraced by organizations across Europe.

Now back in Canada, Blair finds himself at home in his natural habitat: a lively classroom where ideas are examined and exchanged.

Throughout his journey, Blair has had a life mission of exploring one compelling question: How can I help people get out of their own way, so they can live more meaningful and connected lives? He has found at Box of Crayons some powerful answers.
